The Art of Nonfiction
Russell Freedman’s father worked for a publishing company and often brought authors home to have dinner with the family. “I wanted to be like them,” Freedman says. To improve his writing skills, he got a job as a news reporter. His interest in writing biographies started when he learned about a blind 16-year-old boy who had invented a Braille typewriter. Fascinated by the boy’s story, Freedman wrote his first book, Teenagers Who Made History (1961). When asked why he specializes in writing nonfiction for young readers, Freedman says he enjoys the challenge of conveying “the spirit and essence of a life.”

BACKGROUND TO THE BIOGRAPHY
Abraham Lincoln
Despite being born into a poor family with few opportunities, Abraham Lincoln managed to educate himself. He became a successful lawyer and state politician, but he had even greater ambitions. In 1860, he achieved them; he won the presidency. He steered the country through the long and bloody Civil War (1861–1865), which resulted in an end to slavery in the United States. In April 1865, Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth, a southerner who wanted slavery to continue. Lincoln has held an enduring fascination for historians who often find new facets of his personality to examine. As Russell Freedman has pointed out, “Every ten years Lincoln changes character dramatically.”

TEXT ANALYSIS: BIOGRAPHY
Real people often inspire fascinating pieces of writing. A true account of a person’s life that’s written by someone else is called a biography. Writers of biographies
• use the third-person point of view
• present facts and opinions from a variety of sources
• provide an interpretation of a person’s character

As you read this biography, watch for ways Russell Freedman highlights President Lincoln’s strengths and weaknesses.

READING SKILL: IDENTIFY MAIN IDEAS AND DETAILS
Nonfiction writing is usually organized around main ideas, which are the most important ideas a writer wants to convey about a topic. The writer develops the main ideas through supporting details, which can include
• facts: statements that can be proven
• anecdotes: brief stories that reveal important points
• quotations: direct statements from relevant people

Sometimes writers state their main ideas clearly, often at the beginning or end of paragraphs. Other times, you must infer the main ideas from the details provided. As you read, note the main ideas and details on a rough outline like the one shown.

1. Lincoln had a distinctive, changing appearance.
   A. Tall with long legs

The Mysterious Mr. Lincoln

Russell Freedman

“If any personal description of me is thought desirable, it may be said, I am, in height, six feet, four inches, nearly; lean in flesh, weighing, on average, one hundred and eighty pounds dark complexion, with coarse black hair and grey eyes—no other marks or brands recollected.”

Abraham Lincoln wasn’t the sort of man who could lose himself in a crowd. After all, he stood six feet four inches tall, and to top it off, he wore a high silk hat.

His height was mostly in his long bony legs. When he sat in a chair, he seemed no taller than anyone else. It was only when he stood up that he towered above other men.

At first glance, most people thought he was homely. Lincoln thought so too, referring once to his “poor, lean, lank face.” As a young man he was sensitive about his gawky looks, but in time, he learned to laugh at himself. When a rival called him “two-faced” during a political debate, Lincoln replied: “I leave it to my audience. If I had another face, do you think I’d wear this one?”

According to those who knew him, Lincoln was a man of many faces. In repose,1 he often seemed sad and gloomy. But when he began to speak, his expression changed. “The dull, listless features dropped like a mask,” said a Chicago newspaperman. “The eyes began to sparkle, the mouth to smile, the whole countenance was wreathed in animation, so that a stranger would have said ‘Why, this man, so angular and solemn a moment ago, is really handsome!’”

Biography
Who thinks Lincoln is “a man of many faces”? Tell how you know this.
Lincoln was the most photographed man of his time, but his friends insisted that no photo ever did him justice. It’s no wonder. Back then, cameras required long exposures. The person being photographed had to “freeze” as the seconds ticked by. If he blinked an eye, the picture would be blurred. That’s why Lincoln looks so stiff and formal in his photos. We never see him laughing or joking.

Artists and writers tried to capture the “real” Lincoln that the camera missed, but something about the man always escaped them. His changeable features, his tones, gestures, and expressions, seemed to defy description.

Today it’s hard to imagine Lincoln as he really was. And he never cared to reveal much about himself. In company he was witty and talkative, but he rarely betrayed his inner feelings. According to William Herndon, his law partner, he was “the most secretive—reticent—shut-mouthed man that ever lived.”

In his own time, Lincoln was never fully understood even by his closest friends. Since then, his life story has been told and retold so many times, he has become as much a legend as a flesh-and-blood human being. While the legend is based on truth, it is only partly true. And it hides the man behind it like a disguise.

The legendary Lincoln is known as Honest Abe, a humble man of the people who rose from a log cabin to the White House. There’s no doubt that Lincoln was a poor boy who made good. And it’s true that he carried his folksy manners and homespun speech to the White House with him. He said “howdy” to visitors and invited them to “stay a spell.” He greeted diplomats while wearing carpet slippers, called his wife “mother” at receptions, and told bawdy jokes at cabinet meetings.

Lincoln may have seemed like a common man, but he wasn’t. His friends agreed that he was one of the most ambitious people they had ever known. Lincoln struggled hard to rise above his log-cabin origins, and he was proud of his achievements. By the time he ran for president he was a wealthy man, earning a large income from his law practice and his many investments. As for the nickname Abe, he hated it. No one who knew him well ever called him Abe to his face. They addressed him as Lincoln or Mr. Lincoln.

Lincoln is often described as a sloppy dresser, careless about his appearance. In fact, he patronized the best tailor in Springfield, Illinois, buying two suits a year. That was at a time when many men lived, died, and were buried in the same suit.

It’s true that Lincoln had little formal “eddication,” as he would have pronounced it. Almost everything he “larned” he taught himself. All his life he said “thar” for there, “git” for get, “kin” for can. Even so, he became an eloquent public speaker who could hold a vast audience spellbound, and a great writer whose finest phrases still ring in our ears. He was known to sit up late into the night, discussing Shakespeare’s plays with White House visitors.

He was certainly a humorous man, famous for his rollicking stories. But he was also moody and melancholy, tormented by long and frequent bouts of depression. Humor was his therapy. He relied on his yarns, a friend observed, to “whistle down sadness.”

Idioms. An idiom is a phrase that has a meaning different from its individual words. The phrase “do justice to” means “treat fairly or with full appreciation.”

What is the author suggesting with this idiom in line 20?

defy (d*f”) v. to boldly oppose or resist patronize (p*tr-n”) v. to go to as a customer

melancholy (m*l-an-k*”) adj. sad; depressed

1. bawdy (b*’d”) vulg.
2. yarn: an entertaining tale.
He had a cool, logical mind, trained in the courtroom, and a practical, commonsense approach to problems. Yet he was deeply superstitious, a believer in dreams, omens, and visions.

We admire Lincoln today as an American folk hero. During the Civil War, however, he was the most unpopular president the nation had ever known. His critics called him a tyrant, a hick, a stupid baboon who was unfit for his office. As commander in chief of the armed forces, he was denounced as a bungling amateur who meddled in military affairs he knew nothing about. But he also had his supporters. They praised him as a farsighted statesman, a military mastermind who engineered the Union victory.

Lincoln is best known as the Great Emancipator, the man who freed the slaves. Yet he did not enter the war with that idea in mind. “My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union,” he said in 1862, “and is not either to save or destroy slavery.” As the war continued, Lincoln’s attitude changed. Eventually he came to regard the conflict as a moral crusade to wipe out the sin of slavery.

No black leader was more critical of Lincoln than the fiery abolitionist writer and editor Frederick Douglass. Douglass had grown up as a slave. He had won his freedom by escaping to the North. Early in the war, impatient with Lincoln’s cautious leadership, Douglass called him “preeminently the white man’s president, entirely devoted to the welfare of white men.” Later, Douglass changed his mind and came to admire Lincoln. Several years after the war, he said this about the sixteenth president:

“His greatest mission was to accomplish two things: first, to save his country from dismemberment and ruin; and, second, to free his country from the great crime of slavery. . . . taking him for all in all, measuring the tremendous magnitude of the work before him, considering the necessary means to ends, and surveying the end from the beginning, infinite wisdom has seldom sent any man into the world better fitted for his mission than Abraham Lincoln.”
